Her Handling of G. A. R. Encampment.

CROWD

BIG ATTENDANCE IS CREDITED TO CITY AND THE STATE.

Thousands of veterans and their friends waited last evening until after the parade of the living flag and the Wizard of the Wasatch before taking their leave of Salt Lake. All of the trains leaving Salt Lake yesterday, and especially the trains leaving late last Seattle and the Yellowstone park have been packed with departing encampment visitors.

exposition General Henry M. Nevius, retiring commander-in-chief, and Mrs. Nevius; Governor Samuel R. Van Sant, the new commander-in-chief, and Mrs. Samuel R. Van Sant, accompanied by the national staff officers and a large number of other prominent G. A. R. men, left to be present at the G. A. R.

Some few of the G. A. R. men, including Judge Ell Torrance, past com-mander-in-chief of the G. A. R., who have been so busy with G. A. R. work that they have had little time for sightseeing, will remain in Salt Lake for a few days. The large majority of the encampment visitors however. encampment visitors, however, have left Invaluable Advertising.

With the departing old soldier guests of Salt Lake goes an advertisement to the city that is invaluable. Prior to Camp Season Over—Signal their coming to Salt Lake many of the old soldiers and some of the other guests were uncertain as to the quality of the people here and in Utah. Their loyalty and patriotism had been ques-tioned and the visitors were a bit dubious before coming to Salt Lake. To these people an agreeable surprise was

Following the vanguard, were the twelve Janizettes, in Hussar uniforms, mounted on gray horses. Then the grotesques of the parade, the gnomes of the mountains. They were Anup, Har, Hekt, Seb, Pasht, Ba, Apap, Tahuti, Apis and Hapi. After the gnomes were five hundred Wards of the Wizard. They rode four abreast, and each group was in alternate dominoes of

After the wards came the cowboys and the Indians, the nature lovers of the west, first among the children of the Wizard to do him homage. Two hundred of these subjects in the picturesque costumes of the hill and the plain frolicked on horseback after the Wizard, icked on horseback after the Wizard, giving vent to the great joy at the coming of the Wizard and beginning the fun of the annual carnival of the Wizard.

The Wizard's pageant went down Main street and countermarched to the Monument corner, where the throng listened to his wonderful message. Then Agni, Master of the Flames, brought total darkness. When the illumination was restored the Wizard had left. He became a part of the elements of the air and part of the elements of the air and was wafted back to his home in the moun-

From the lips of the Wizard this was the message that came to his people:
"O wards, and dwellers in this, the most beloved of all my valleys, I greet "At last I have come from my jeweled caverns in the Wasatch to view the beautiful city that has been reared in my domain. And with me come my retinue, domain. And with me come my retinue, and the attendant spirits of Air, of Fire, Earth and Water.

"From aforetime, throughout the dim and distant past, coevel with creation, have we dwelt within the secret hollows of these mountains, awaiting this hour.

"Long, oh long, have we awaited while countless centuries, unfraught with circumstances, have come and gone. The countiess centuries, unfraught with circumstances, have come and gone. The hills have clad themselves in beauteous robes; the sunset skies have hung their crimson raiment o'er the valleys through seasons numberless—the vacant history of pilling years recorded only on the rocks.
My mountains have brooded in silence and alone, each year the counterpart of that which went before; each day the echo of the yesterday.

the yesterday.

"Until earth grew weary of her years of strifeless peace, and in her sorrow sobbed for man to come and dwell upon her breast, there was no listening ear to catch the strain of merry music in the waterfall. Unheard the patter of the gentle rain, unheard the thunder of the rolling storm. To footfall broke the still gentle rain, unneard the thunder of the rolling storm; no footfall broke the silence of the night; no echoing bell tolled forth the heedless hours.

"Then fell the day when earth cried out and called upon the mountains and the clouds, and to rivers and to distant lands, bemoaning that she was weary of her loneliness; and then from out the pathless chasms of the hills, I lifted up my voice and bade her cease, saying: Earth, be thou comforted; the period of thy desolation soon shall end—thy human history begin—thy vales be peopled with a multitude. The faculty in man which bids him peer into the depths of what is vast and infinite, tempts him to explore thy and infinite, tempts him to explore thy measureless domain. His restless eye interrogates the west, wondering upon the mysteries of its mountains, picturing the beauties of its parks and coveting the metals of its caves. Yet a few years, and thou, unsatisfied earth, that bemoanest thy solitariness, shall feel how ruthless is the hand of him thou wooest. He comes to scale thy peaks and trample down thy fairest flowers for his vanity; he comes to chase the deer and the bison from thy parks, he comes to pierce thy sides for his cupidity. Yet, though a tyrant, he knows how to love and how to glory in thy grandeur; thy fair face to him shall be the dearest under heaven; and his delight to gladden thy waste places—on thy breast he shall weave the destinies of his majestic will—shall rear his palaces and make on thee his home.
